

Sinclair Broadcasting's recent decision to make their stations air "Stolen Honor," a questionable film that seeks to dishonor one of our candidates for President, is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair's use of public airwaves requires them to act in the public's interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, they pay more attention to profits than public interest. Fox News has demonstrated this time and again.

Sinclair's actions demonstrate the reasons why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
